

WATER TROUBLES

SUITABLE not just for remote-area touring, the Ironman 4x4 low-water alarm kit is a great addition to any city runabout. The kit's technology has the ability to sense a negative current in the radiator water, and when the water drops below one of two probes, an alarm and warning light activate before there is even movement in the temperature gauge. The kit suits 12- and 24-volt systems and plastic or metal header tanks. Get one before it is too late!

RRP: $199

Website: www.ironman4x4.com

SCOUT'S HONOUR

VETERAN journalist and 4x4 historian Jim Allen, along with Scout expert and collector John Glancy, have dished up the only Scout book the enthusiast will ever need. With a foreword by the late Rod Phillips, The International Scout Encyclopedia chronicles the history of all the favourite Scout models. This officially licensed Scout publication features never-before-seen pictures and new details about the iconic 4x4 that will surprise even the most dedicated devotee. A must-have for any fan of International Harvester or vintage four-wheel drive rigs.

RRP: $100 (approx.)

Website: www.octanepress.com

TOASTED SANGA

NOTHING beats devouring a piping-hot jaffle in the middle of winter. The ARB Toastie Brander consists of two cast-iron plates, and the handles are formed from Manchurian ash timber. Not only will it melt two pieces of bread together with cheese and tomato, it will also brand the ARB logo onto both sides. Granted, this does nothing to enhance the flavour of an already glorious item of campsite cuisine, but it's a great novelty on an awesome product.

Website: www.arb.com.au